

Summer theatre series wraps up with a classic Foster

Brampton Guardian

BRAMPTON— The final show in the Rose Theatre's 2013 Summer Theatre season will open tonight (Aug. 2).

Closing out the four-show series is a tried-and-true Norm Foster— The Melville Boys, which runs until Aug. 24 in Studio Two.

One of Foster's "staples", the play will satisfy an appetite for poignancy and comedy, without really trying— typical of the works written by heralded the Canadian playwright.

This one is stocked with a cast of returning favourites— Erin McKinnon, Jamie McRoberts, Jim Watson and Brampton's own Scott Carmichael— and is directed by Rob Woodcock.

The play takes us along on a relaxing weekend trip full of fishing, football, and beer with the Melville brothers. But their trip is thrown for a loop when the boys meet two attractive sisters who inadvertently change more than their weekend plans.

In this modern Canadian classic, Foster offers a tender, vigorous comedy about brotherhood and the unexpected.
