

Pitching in for a good cause

Peel police officers and Region of Peel staff pitched in recently to help keep the charitable work of the United Way alive.

Officers with 21 Division Neighbourhood Policing Unit (NPU) and Peel employees faced each other in a charity baseball game held at Brampton's Sesquicentennial Park, at Countryside Drive and Bramalea Road, late last month. Each participant donated $10 with proceeds going to the United Way of Peel.

Superintendent Stephen Wallaston threw the first pitch of the game to get things going. The baseball game is one of several fundraising events the officers with 21 Division NPU organize every year.

Programs for women with cancer offered an Olive Branch of Hope

Leila Springer, a breast cancer survivor and one of the founders of the Olive Branch of Hope, a Toronto-based breast cancer support organization, was in Brampton to plan for an upcoming fundraiser recently.

The Olive Branch of Hope's third annual Fall Luncheon will take place, Sunday, Nov. 7 at the Century Gardens Recreation and Community Centre located at 340 Vodden St. Springer met with the members of the Peel outreach centre at the Bramalea Free Methodist Church to lend her support to the fight against breast cancer.

Springer, who was diagnosed with cancer in 1999, set up the organization with Winsome Johnson, another cancer survivor and together they co-founded the Olive Branch of Hope.

The main mandate of the organization is to provide support and education to women from diverse backgrounds and remove the barriers that prevent the women from accessing health care.

The organization has a strong emphasis on spirituality which it believes is an essential component of the healing process and journey.

The Olive Branch of Hope's Peel branch planning committee members have been putting finishing touches to the planning of their luncheon.
